Who will Vote at the Next Election? It will be a happy day for the world when it out-grows barbarism-when man will recognize everywhere in his fellowman a friend and brother. The political geography of the world, as spread on the map, seems, however, to indicate that we are still a long way from the happy period. The merging of petty State, into large nations is the best assurance of work of enlightenment moves slowly, very slowly, indeed. Men are still localised, still controlled by mere local prejudices, that show themselves in an intense love of country-careless whether the neighboring State gains or loses, so long as they win. This love of country men call patriotism-and which has, not inaptly, some think, been designated by Rousseau as " an ardent desire to injure every other country to benefit your own. From Leonidas and Thermopyle down to Lopez and Paraguay, history is full of the noble deeds that men have per-formed under its influence. When Wallace became the champion of Scotch independence, patriotism was a virtue ; but if a Scotchman merely advocated to-day the making of Scotland into a nation independent of England, his utterances would be regarded as prejudice. Hence, patriotism, when measured by some cir-cumstances, is a virtue; but change the circumstances, unlocalize opinions, merge a number of small States into one great nation, and what was patriotism becomes prejudice. Russia, Prussia and Italy are working with might and main to un-localize the patriotism of their populalations, and parrow down barbarism to its last form—large nationalities. The political revolution in which we are taking part—the Confederation—union of the British American Provinces—is all in the direction of a larger patriotism-a greater nationalism. Provincial prejudices are becoming unlocalized; and the British American of to-day, who surveys the vast homestead committed to his care, scarcely recognises in its gigantic proportions the petty Provinces of yesterday. He sees his country bounded by three oceans, and he is no longer a provincial. He may stay in British Columbia, but he lives in the Dominion. He feels himself politically another man with a grander destiny-with larger, nobler, more god-like sentiments and ambition. He feels that petty patriotism is almost a thing of the past, and that the world is welcomed to our country to elect a home. We have been led into these hurried reflections by the question at the head of this article-" Who will vote at the next election ?" We have invited all the world to come here and make the country their home. All the advanced peoples of Europe and America are represented in our midst. The British element is largely in the majority; but our foreign residents form in our cities and towns, in our mines, and on our farms, a highly respectable minority.

The British population, as a matter of course, will vote; but to exclude those who speak our language, who worship in our churches, who send their children to our schools, who delve in our mines. who work on our farms, who buy and sell in our stores, and who share in the support of all our benevolent societies, and contribute liberally to the Treasury of the State-to exclude this class of our population from voting simply because they have never pronounced the British political Shibboleth of allegiance seems to be a hard case, indeed. All the interests of this class are identified with our mat rial prosperity. Their homes and the homes of their children are likely to be here. Yet if we interpret correctly Governor Musgrave's utterance in his Opening Speech to the Legislative Council, none but British subjects will be allowed to vote at the next election. We repeat that this seems to be a hard case. It is however but the inexorable custom of patriotic peoples—of nations—revived once more: obsolete here since 1866 but revived again in 1870. If nations were like Masonic or Odd Fellows' Lodges, and every man who possessed certain qualifications could affiliate and be elegible to vote or hold office, nationalsm—the last form of barbarism—would be exploded, and every man would be a citizen of the world. There seems however to be but little hope in our time of getting rid of the nationalism that under Providence controls the world. In this the Ultimo Thule of British America, we are still the subjects of its power. To be a man is not always to be guaranteed the exercise everywhere of the inalienable rights of a man. Prejudice and patriotism are alike clogs to the emancipation of man. Our foreign residents are likely to labor under a political disability at the next election. The general senti-ment of the British population is to con-fine the vote to British Subjects. To this many aliens offer no objection,simply because it is the custom of nationalism. We think, however, that some thing might be done to modify the rigid rule of highly organized nations in respect to the franchise. The Yale Con-owned real estate should vote at our elections. That itself would be a boonpossibly an act of justice-to those whose present home is and whose long last resting place is likely to be in our midst. At least it is not so extreme an innovation as throwing the suffrage open to all; and consequently not so likely to meet with opposition from any portion of the British element. The next election is to determine whether we will accept Confederation or not. We have no doubt but all British Colmbians will vote 'ves.' . If such will be the case, -and Confederation opens up a citizenship bounded by the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, why may there not be provision to allow all aliens who might think proper, to take the oath of allegiance, preparatory to voting, provided they have resided long enough in the country to study its wants. To be a subject of England in an honor; and to become a citizen of Canada will yet be esteemed a proud advancing civilization; but still the privelege In these days when the right of self-expatriation is acknowledged by England and European States, we see no good reason why any one whose interest it is to reside here, should be denied the opportunity to qualify himself or should refuse to qualify himself, to exercise the privilege of casting his vote in the interest of his adopted country.
